Producer-Owned Reinsurance Companies/Cells

Intermediaries, brokers, managing general agents and other insurance producers that have developed profitable accounts of business are increasingly seeking innovative structures to grow their revenue, and exert a greater degree of influence and control over their underwriting capacity.

This can be achieved by the creation of a reinsurer, sponsored by the insurance producer, to provide a bespoke facility that can underwrite, on a reinsurance basis, a proportion of the insurance products.

This type of structure is more commonly known as a producer-owned reinsurance company or cell (PORC), and requires a partnership with an authorized insurer to provide the necessary fronting for the regulated aspects of policy issue and claims.

The reinsurer participates in the underwriting via an agreed cession from the fronting insurer, and in this way captures a share of the underwriting profits whilst also exercising some control over key aspects such as rating, policy coverage and claims.

The use of a protected cell company (PCC) as an alternative to a limited company is an attractive entry into this style of facility, offering the opportunity to establish a cell within an existing facility with the advantage of low setup costs and capital requirements.

It will appeal to those insurance business producers wishing to share in their underwriting risk and capture profits currently being lost to the commercial market.

Artex offers market-leading expertise in the creation of underwriting structures, and our specialists can guide you through the entire project to form a producer-sponsored reinsurer.
